Video games are games people play on a screen for entertainment. These games help users relieve stress and help exercise some of their senses and parts of the body.

However, what do video games do to the users?

Video games may be fun, but there are some game users, especially we, as believers should not reconsider. The games which involve violence or promote evil may entice dark influences to contaminate the user's environment.

Video game users that play excessively tend to separate themselves more from others that may include family, friends, and other associates. As believers, God sees and knows our hearts. Video games decrease our relationship with Him due to time consumption. If a believer on a given day spends more time playing than doing the things of God, it becomes an obsession.

Video games are a venture. It can easily help alleviate a problem one moment, and when the game is over, the problem is still there. The pros and cons of video games depend on the interests we have in life.

For example, if a game user likes baseball, and plays baseball video games, what will the mind be consumed after playing? Baseball. Video games are fun and should not take it to heart.

Too much of anything worldly is not good for the body or spirit. Video games are carnal, and some of the graphics and content are spiritual.
