Clumsy is someone that moves awkwardly. There is behaving clumsily on the external part of us, but what about the internal? There is the inner being that commits to deciding on certain things before manifesting on the outside. Anything that possibly materializes on the outside begins in the internal. This is a spiritual battle where God is a spirit-being and will be able to help us by asking Him. Clumsy is clutter inside. Believers and unbelievers, we are responsible for what goes in and comes out. As we know, our ears and eyes will contribute to what comes out through our mouth verbally and actions physically. Therefore anything that will jeopardize our freedom, cause contamination, and is in your control, keep it out.

Clumsy is being laid back and not making positive progress within our lives. There is a fine line between doing something and not making an effort to do something. The difference is having the will: especially God's will. If we are responsible for our family or play a role to help within, that alone should motivate us to try. After all, most of us make maximum effort in these areas, why not contribute our best to take care of them.

Clumsy is not being organized.

Preparation is an important fundamental to practice. Missing out on an opportunity of any kind directed our way only to throw it away due to carelessness results in a history of missed opportunity. Chances are those favorable circumstances rarely duplicate themselves. Therefore we should make necessary arrangements to be prepared instead of being disorderly impaired.

Clumsy incurs due to our mindset. The famous line "a mind is a terrible thing to waste" may apply in this case. Our minds should be made up for decisions to be made that present themselves and the opportunity to capitalize on them.

Clumsy acceptance may cause us to slip or stagger at times. The things of the world which are known as vanity will cause us not to see clearly. These things are contrary to God and His word. However, we should ensure that our relationship with Him will always help bring light by navigating us in the right direction.

Clumsy situations will occur outside or inside sometimes. The truth is we have the chance to adjust and handle it before it becomes a habit. Therefore let go and let God intervene on our behalf today.
